1. Alberto MARTIN Artajo and other officials of the FRANCO Government indicated in June 1951 that they favored Archduke Otto of Hapsburg as the pretender to the Spanish throne. According to source, Don Juan was antagonistic towards Otto of Hapsburg.¹ The reason for this antagonism reportedly stemmed from Otto of Hapsburg's failure to invite Don Juan to his wedding and from the fact that Otto of Hapsburg considered himself as the successor to the titles of Alfonso XII.
2. A dinner was given for Otto of Hapsburg after he expressed a desire to meet the Spanish nobility. The Duke of Alba told one of the organizers of the dinner, the Count of Elda, that he would not attend the affair, as he considered Otto of Hapsburg a usurper and ungrateful to Don Juan. As a result, the great majority of the nobility invited to the dinner, with the exception of the Duke of Hernani and the Duke of Bailen, refused to attend.
3. Subsequently MARTIN Artajo asked the Conde de Camo de Alange to organize another dinner which the nobility also boycotted. MARTIN Artajo then addressed a letter to Jose LARRAZ Lopez, Monarchist leader inside Spain, in which he severely criticized the Monarchists and accused them of issuing subversive propaganda against the regime.
1. [REDACTED] reported that relations between Don Juan and Archduke Otto of Hapsburg were cordial in early February 1951.
